Why do people fear wind turbines?

The towering nature of wind turbines can easily trigger this related fear. Similarly, those with storm phobia or a fear of severe weather might find their anxiety heightened by the sight of wind turbines, which they associate with strong winds. But what causes someone to develop this specific fear?

Do you have a fear of windmills?

People with anxiety disorders or a predisposition to phobias may be more likely to develop a fear of windmills. The human brain is wired to be cautious of large, moving objects, and for some, this caution transforms into full-blown fear when confronted with wind turbines. Environmental factors can't be ignored either.
